

Your Bible is your legacy.

> We will tell the next generation the praiseworthy deeds of the Lord. — Psalm 78:4

Our co-founder, Aaron D. Minard, has a grandmother in her 90s. She owns several Bibles, all marked up: verses highlighted, passages circled, notes filling the margins. Open one and you hear a lifetime of conversation with God.

Your Bible can be your legacy.

We put real energy into what we will leave our children: the business, the savings, the property. Yet little compares with a Bible carrying our own notes, because it passes on a glimpse of our relationship with God.

A highlighted promise tells a child what held you steady. A circled word tells them what God made plain. A dated prayer tells them He answered. They inherit a witness.

In 2 Timothy 1:5, Paul recalls Timothy's "sincere faith, which first lived in your grandmother Lois and in your mother Eunice." Faith is watched and inherited.

In a digital age, fewer and fewer things are captured on paper, and even our Bibles are now on screens. Aaron uses digital Bibles too and sees their value. But a physical page with handwritten notes is something a screen cannot give you.

Scripture treats this kind of handing down as a core calling. Psalm 78:4 says, "We will not hide them from their descendants; we will tell the next generation the praiseworthy deeds of the Lord, his power, and the wonders he has done." A marked-up Bible is that telling, kept on paper.

Start where you are. Pick up your Bible this week and write: the date, a verse that met you, a prayer and how God answered it. Do not wait until the notes are polished. Imperfect, honest notes are what a son or daughter will treasure.

Write in your Bible today. Someone will read it tomorrow.
